Type of comment: Object to the proposal

Comment: My chief objection is not the scale of the building but the increased footfall engendered by the new school once it reaches full capacity. Even without the use of private cars adding to current congestion, the ability of buses to get through from other Boroughs - from where many of the pupils will come - is contestable. Worse, Mortlake Station and the level crossing are danger spots now: without huge mitigation such as the expansion of the station entrances and an introduction of automatic barriers, the closure of the timber yard and other businesses to make the space safe, and improved road crossings on the Lower Richmond Rd, plus safety precautions around the Level Crossing on the railway (already a concern for Thomson School), I can't see any possibility of the safety provisions for young people arriving at the site to be considered legally safe, let alone comfortable.
