Comment: The loss of town centre parking provision is a terrible strategy. Car ownership isn't going to disappear any time soon. The price of ev cars will steadily reduce as more people get rid of their combustion engines and private car ownership will continue for along time yet. Why, because people like choice and freedom in this country. The council should create more parking spaces within the scheme not less. If this strategy isn't adjusted two things will happen 1. the already limited on-street parking around the town centre will fall even more short of demand. 2. Twickenham will become a less attractive location for shoppers who prefer to drive rather than take public transport. In short they will choose to go else where to spend their money which will have a direct impact on local business and in turn council income.
