Comment: I cannot believe that after the Mayor of London's decisive rejection of the original proposal that what has been resubmitted is so similar to that failed plan. The proposal is still too dense, too tall and far too large for existing infrastructure to contend with. During the bulk of the day we only have two trains an hour to London Waterloo now, rather than the four when this all started so daytime congestion will be even worse. Everyone agrees that the brewery site need to be redeveloped to bring some life back to Mortlake, but this plan does not care at all about the cost to the rest of the area and the the lives of the people who will be forever affected by it. The MBCG have a perfectly acceptable set of proposals and this plan does not take them into account.

There are things I agree with - well one thing; the boat club, but everything else is ludicrously oversized for the area, except of course for the provision of affordable housing which is ludicrously undersized. The cinema sums up to me the lack of local study as it is far larger than the ones we already have quite nearby that are not currently full to bursting. The plan seems to envisage that this is an area of great urban density with brilliant public transport links so that people will come from miles around to eat out and watch a movie. The reality is that the roads are congested during the day the train are rammed full during rush hour but in the evenings it is a quiet suburban area. If you are building what is in effect a small town surely you should be obliged to improve the transport infrastructure that serves it ?

The Mayor made two things abundantly clear when he rejected the proposals - the lack of affordable housing provided by the borough as a whole and that this plan was not in keeping with the open and arcadian nature of the site. There are a few cosmetic tweaks but the heights particular on the waters edge should come down by at least half and there should be half the number of building to create more green accessible space. Space that is not compromised by being in deep shadow from huge blocks. This plan seems pointless as it fails to address the Mayor's concerns so why waste everybody's time rather than come up with something that he might expect ?

On the doorstep canvassing for the last council election, the Lib Dems promised that they were opposed to this development; as they now contour the council almost entirely I expect them to keep they word and reject this plan which after all is larger than the one the council previously accepted.
