Comments

Type of comment: Object to the proposal

Comment: I am against the proposed planning application. Mortlake has precious little greenery left. What we should be planning now is to create vistas, so our eyes can feast on the banks of the river and draw us to the tow-path and beyond. Is this not where the world-renowned Mortlake tapestries were produced in the 17th century? Was this not the location of King Henry VIII's chief minister, Thomas Cromwell, who lived here until he lost his head for being too clever? And wasn't this the place where Mortlake's first brewery was founded in 1487 to slake the thirst of the monks in a local monastery? We have history galore on this spot. and we should make the most of it - before someone else comes along, and throws another half-baked, money-grubbing piece of developer's trash at us. What's wrong with our having a converted museum here, with a few old-fashioned shops, a restaurant and even a micro-brewery?

Let's put Mortlake first!
